PREFACE.

So much has already been written concerning dreams and their interpretation that a lengthy discussion of the subject is out of place even in such a work as this; however, for the benefit of those who are inclined to be skeptical, a brief historical review of the theory of dreams cannot be avoided. It is plain that even in the savage's conception of dreaming there is room for the thought of a Divine announcement, the essence of which so to speak lies in the fact that it conveys to the dreamer something which the Divine personage wishes him to know, whether it be the will of this Being in the shape of a command, or a prohibition, or some fact as yet unknown, past or future, the knowledge of which will be of practical value to the recipient.

The Divine communication which thus makes use of the medium of a dream will, it is plain, vary considerably in the degree of its intelligibility. Sometimes the meaning of the message is obvious and unmistakable; the actions to be performed and the facts to be known are revealed plainly and directly; in such cases there is little need of a dream book, on the other hand the communication may be disguised and only partially divulged by symbol, in which case there arises the necessity of an art of interpretation. Spencer says: "It follows from what has been said respecting the novelty of dream-combinations that many of the usual images which make up so large a bulk of our dreams cannot easily be fitted to any actual order of events; they must be regarded as symbolic. Accordinly we find that the symbolic function of dreams has been fully recognized in all the theories of dreaming now dealt with; agreeably with this supposition the task of deciphering dream symbols gradually grew into a skilled art."

Homer declares that dreams are sent by the gods intended to enlighten but often deceiving.

Thus it will be seen that in all ages and by all classes have dreams been held in reverence as coming from the spirit world. The art of interpretation being crude and unreliable at first, has made rapid strides in the last two centuries until to-day we present the most reliable and authentic dream book ever published, the gathering of the material for which has occupied several years of careful research.

BIRTHDAYS AND THEIR SIGNIFICANCE.

SUNDAY—The male child born on Sunday will be a care to his parents and latter a burden to himself; will be profligate and die at an early age.

A girl born on Sunday will grow up to be a comfort and blessing to her parents; will make a good wife and a loving mother.

MONDAY—A boy born on this day will be of quick and bad temper, he seldom acquires esteem and honor.

A girl born on Monday will be industrious and make an economical house-wife.

TUESDAY—A male born on Tuesday will never live to any great age, but will acquire much wealth; will have a strong will and be inclined to drink; but have a good heart.

The girl born on Tuesday will marry well, but will be a widow twice; she will have many lovers and live to a ripe age; mild and forgiving; will have many friends.

WEDNESDAY—The boy born on Wednesday will be religious and a great church member if not a minister: will have many children who will cause many anxious moments; his old age will be spent in poverty.

The girl born on Wednesday will be profligate and lazy and will come to a bad end, unless she has very strict early training.

THURSDAY—The boy born on this day will be a student but inclined to gambling and dissipation; he will die a violent death, unless he is watchful.

The girl born on this day will be lucky all her life and will only suffer by her violent temper.

FRIDAY—A boy born on Friday will have ill luck in all business enterprises, but will have good health and a strong constitution: will marry twice.

A girl born on this day had better chose wisely and not marry a man born on this day unless the wedding service is also performed on Friday, as it is her lot to be unhappily married

SATURDAY—A boy born on Saturday will live long and have riches, but will be slow to marry.

A girl born on this day will marry late in life one who is much older; she will have no children but will be happy.
